

A Great Valentine's Gift Idea for Your Child

Posted by admin on January 20, 2010 · 3 Comments

It is hard to believe that we are just a few weeks from Valentine's Day. Didn't we all just put away our winter holiday decorations? Here is my favorite new idea for a gift that you can get your child for Valentine's Day, and it is made by a mom from the Philadelphia area.

What better gift can a parent give to a child than self-confidence?

My son has a tendency to be awfully hard on his self. About a month ago we began reciting some positive affirmations each morning and night. It genuinely seems to be helping him to feel calmer and more at ease. Then recently I connected with Debbie Oser of Keeping It Positive, who has taken the power of positive thinking to the next level.

Based on the notion that one should say positive affirmations before going to bed and when you wake up in the morning, Debbie created a line of pillowcases and mugs with such affirmations. The pillowcases ($16.50 each) have sixteen different affirmations and come in four colors (blue, green, pink and purple).

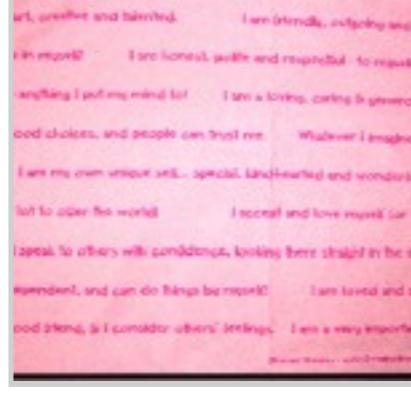

They are not just great for children like mine who can be hard on themselves. Who wouldn't want to go to sleep on a pillowcase with such strong and amazing sayings on them? What a wonderful way to begin and end a day – full of excitement and promise!

The mugs ($12.99 each) make great gifts too. I purchased one so each morning I can remind myself that I am in charge of my own destiny!

For more information and to place your order, go to <http://www.keepingitpositive.net/>. Items are available for quick shipping for Valentine's Day.

Do you know someone who is grieving or fighting a serious illness? Use the contact form on the site to ask Debbie about her special order pillow cases which offer tremendous support for those in need.

Naomi Judd just said that after age 35 we can no longer blame our mothers. Please, don't repeat that to mine. I'm not done yet.
